

GROWING A WILDLIFE GARDEN

It's hard to find wildlife in our urban neighborhoods, but one way we can help is by creating a wildlife garden at home!

These gardens will create homes for native species that are quickly losing their habitats in our developing world. Take a look at these tips on how to make your garden wildlife-friendly!

Plant flowers like violets, marigolds, and sunflowers to attract pollinating insects

Grow native edible shrubs, like blackberry and red currant. They will be a great snack for you and butterflies!

Pile old rocks and tiles to create a home for small mammals and bugs

Set up a bird box with water and food to house birds. You may see some chicks hatching in the spring!

Compost peels and food waste as a natural fertilizer and a habitat for earthworms
